PREFACE TO "PICTORIAL HISTORY OF INDIANA" OR "INDIANA SCRAPBOOK"

This book is the second in such a series on states of the Old Northwest. The first with 1,000 illustrations had to do with "Ohio, Gateway State" (4 vols.). This one consists of 1,500 pictures illustrating the author's other three volumes of "Indiana, Hoosier State:" I, History; II, Historical Atlas; III, Government and Basic Documents. It has been made possible by the recent developments in electronic duplicating process. It has been made necessary by the rapid trend to urban way of life and need for materials to aid the imagination of younger persons especially in their reconstruction of the earlier predominant rural-agricultural way. It all moves forward in general chronological order. Things, persons, places and processes are stressed. The author has been a teacher in all grades of public education for several years.

Such an array of illustrations must be very dependent on the work of others, appreciation for which is expressed here. It has been aided by contributions of industrial concerns and their organizations, old hand-drawn or photographic plates which have been long out of circulation and needed to be brought back into service and the editor's own collection. The splendid collection of pictures at Indiana Historical Library at Indianapolis has been used much by others, hence is used less here. Other materials of value have been those published by the Fort Wayne Public Library and by state agencies at Indianapolis, as Indiana Historical Bureau and State Historical Society. So there were the Historical Bulletin, County Archaelogical Surveys, Leaflets, Emblems, Pre-History Research Series, Travelogues. And useful have been "Outdoor Indiana" and other Conservation materials. Valuable also have been old issues of "Prairie Farmer" and the booklets on sesquicentennial celebrations, as those at Winchester and Evansville and that of Virgil E. Davis, "Brookville through Our Years." And most helpful also have been loans of materials by public libraries at Peru and Plymouth, especially, and the loan by New Harmony Tourist Council. Conservation Commission supplied the map. The pictures are an accumulating of fifty years, assorted and arranged; many other ones had to be omitted.

A word to prospective users may be constructive. Approach it systematically: Flip through the pages to see what is there; notice list of pictures and their organization; select the area of interest or conduct a general "look-fest," with or without projector or reading glass. Notice architecture, streets and the things on them, styles in clothing and hair dress, tools and implements, materials from which they were made, presence or lack of "candid shots," etc. And this "scrap book" may be used as foundation for individual enterprise in the making of another book, by pasting other pictures on the back of these pages, or by cutting out the pictures here and merging them with those of your own collection, regrouped and renumbered, with new table of contents, new index, new title page and preface, to build up the feeling of individual or class creative work. Loose-leaf covers make satisfactory binding for the new volumes. Good luck to "oldsters" with their looking, and to youngsters in class and out in constructive picture collection.
